BOOK STUDY

CULTURALLY RESPONSIVE CLASSROOMS

Join us for a text-based discussion of Zaretta Hammond's Culturally Responsive Teaching and the Brain. Participants will need to purchase the book by January 11th. However, if you have a hardship, and are unable to purchase the book, please reach out directly to rshea@measinc.com for assistance.

Kick-Off

This session will launch the Culturally Responsive Teaching and the Brain book study which will begin in late January. In this special session, we will explore an overview of culturally responsive classrooms, the framework CRTB offers us as educators, and the impact it can have on our students' learning experiences. Books will be provided to participants.

Part 1

Building Awareness and Knowledge

This session will explore helping students to become independent learners, understanding culture in the classroom, how the brain works, and ways to become a culturally responsive practitioner.

Building Learning Partnerships

This session will explore the foundational elements of building learning partnerships, understanding trust generators, understanding how to be an ally as a teacher, develop alliances to help students build their independence, and build natural confidence in your students as learners.

Part 2

Part 3

Building Intellectual Capacity

This session will explore how teachers can build intellectual capacity and create culturally responsive communities of learning for students.
